

LOW SOCIETY.

By Stephen Wren

The Expendables, Rambo, Scarface, John Wick
Enough violence right there to make you feel sick
Casino, Goodfellas, The Sopranos, Jack Reacher
Just what do you s'posed they're going to teach ya?

Our kids with devices that dictate their day
That influence their thoughts and they things that they say

Their strange choice of heroes, reality TV
That never inspire what we need them to be

Born out of wedlock or with an absentee dad
Never learning the benefits that old values had
Violence and porn just a mouse-click away
False expectations at work and at play

Political correctness; the modern fascism!
Such hypocritical drivel that causes division
Ignorant school children with a bad attitude
Diagnosed as bi-polar when they're simply just rude

Our countries are led by criminals and fools
Who care not about what happens in schools
They're determined to divide us, pitting black against white;
Children against parents and left against right

They peddle fear to make us dependant and weak
To kill off our drive and the futures we seek
The prices we paid for the lives that we lead
Are forgotten in lieu of the worship of greed.

Our pioneers blazed trails and died where they fell
And the traditions of our veterans who experienced hell
Yet their deeds are forgotten and not taught at all
We're told to feel shame any time we recall

The wealth of our land and our kid's legacies
Are being sold off like wildfire to future enemies.
Meanwhile we're distracted by rubbish and swill
How long will it be 'til we've all had our fill?

So, there's no need to wonder why mass shootings take place
Just look at society - it's right there in your face
We collectively need to pull back from the brink
Or else all we've fought for will go straight down the sink.
